Which Xinjiang-based manufacturers are in the solar supply chain?

Regarding Xinjiang-based manufacturers in the solar supply chain, here are some key findings of the report: With a production volume of 498,500 metric tons in 2020, Xinjiang Hoshine Silicon is the world's largest manufacturer of metallurgical-grade silicon (silicon metal), the raw material for polysilicon.

How does forced labor affect the solar supply chain in Xinjiang?

The impact of forced labor in Xinjiang on the solar supply chain is extensive: "The downstream companies that are potentially affected by forced labor span the globe," concludes lead author Laura T. Murphy, Professor of Human Rights and Contemporary Slavery at SHU's Helena Kennedy Centre for International Justice.

Does hoshine contaminate the solar supply chain?

If its statement is correct, Hoshine supplies all of the world's top eight polysilicon manufacturers and thus contaminates almost the complete solar supply chain. This is probably the most startling finding of the SHU report.
